Without the assistance of many people, this collection would not be possible. The collection benefited from a Publication Award, which I secured through the help of Chancellor Richard Telfer, Denise Ehlen, and the University of Wisconsin-Whitewater Office of Research and Sponsored Programs. Especially beneficial was the new program sponsored by the College of Letters and Science, the Release Time Award. Indeed, without this release time I could not have completed the bulk of the laborious editorial work performed during this period. I would like to thank the entire dean’s office, especially Mary Pinkerton, David Travis, and Liz Hachten.

A number of people in my department have been quite supportive, especially Julie Smith and Geneva Moore, who have been both good friends and admirable colleagues. The participants in my Black Queer Theory Reading Group offered stimulating conversation and support, among them especially Rick Oehling and Marilyn Annucci. Finally, I would like to thank Marjorie Rhine for her continued commitment to academic rigor and for her support of my work. In addition, Stephanie Lawton helped with word-processing.

Among the people who helped me in the broader academic community, I would like to thank Robert Bucholz, Susan Koppelman, and Julia McCrossin. I owe the greatest thanks to my contributors, who besides contributing excellent pieces also provided insights into the topic at large.

The two anonymous reviewers’ thoughtful critiques improved the final manuscript. The entire staff at The Ohio State University Press have been professional and courteous from beginning to end. I would especially like to note the singular assistance of Sandy Crooms.

Among those who sustained me in what proved to be a difficult personal period are Liz Levy-Navarro and the whole Hagermoser clan, including Alex and Helen. I would also like to thank my friend and colleague Jesse Swan, who has offered the most solid advice anyone can hope for, whether it is about matters intellectual or matters seemingly mundane. His commitment to a fattening politics is a constant inspiration to me. Finally, I would like to thank my parents, to whom this book is dedicated, for their continual support. They have helped me in more ways than I can say.
