Zeynep Z. Atayurt received her M.A. degree in Twentieth Century Literature and her Ph.D. degree in English from the University of Leeds, UK. She is currently a member of the academic staff at the Department of English Language and Literature at Ankara University in Turkey. Her research interests include literary and visual representations of fatness in contemporary Anglo-American culture and literature.

Anne Brumley has published a number of short pieces on food history and popular fiction, most recently in The Business of Food, edited by Gary Allen and Ken Albala. She is now a freelance writer and a dressmaker specializing in elegant fashion for those whose bodies don’t match hypothetical “standards.”

Alex Evans is a strategic coordinator in the field of young people’s sexual health and HIV support for an inner-London borough; he has a long career working with disadvantaged young people in inner-city settings. He received his Ph.D., concerned with the politics of AIDS, at the University of Sussex in the UK and lectured on issues such as politics and cultural theory, class, and sexuality for some time in the School of Culture, Literature and Society at the University of Canterbury in Christchurch, New Zealand. His published work includes essays in Literature/Film Quarterly, the Journal of Film and Video, and a forthcoming collection on popular culture after 9/11 from Continuum Press. He is also the author of several professionally produced works of drama.

Serena GuarraCino holds a two-year research grant at the University of Naples “L’Orientale,” where she holds her Ph.D. in “Literatures, Cultures, and Histories of Anglophone Countries,” with a dissertation titled “Having Voice: Opera Migrations in English-speaking Cultures.” She has published on the role of female singers in nineteenth- and twentieth-century women’s writing and on opera in J. M. Coetzee’s Disgrace, music in Shakespeare’s romances, the relations between music and postcolonial theory, national narratives in the English early music revival, and more recently the influence of feminist theory in new musicology. She has recently been working on teaching English as L2 through a cultural studies approach and authored the workbook Telling Stories in Contemporary English: A Workbook in English Language and Cultural Studies (Rome: Aracne, 2007). She also translated into Italian the short poem “Sycorax,” by Indo-English writer Suniti Namjoshi (in Istantanee di Caliban—Sycorax [Naples: Liguori, 2008]). She edited with Lidia Curti and Marta Cariello the first online issue of the journal AION Anglistica (www.anglistica.unior.it), titled “The Other Cinema, the Cinema of the Other,” and is now editing with Marina Vitale another issue for the same journal titled “Voicings: Musica across Borders.”

JOYCE L. HUFF is an Associate Professor of English at Ball State University. She specializes in nineteenth-century British literature and culture, disability studies, and fat studies. She is currently working on a book titled Conspicuous Consumptions: Fat in Nineteenth-Century British Literature and Culture. Her previous work has appeared in the following collections: Bodies Out of Bounds: Fatness and Transgression (Berkeley: University of California Press, 2001); Cultures of the Abdomen: Diet, Digestion and Fat in the Modern World (Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire: Palgrave Macmillan, 2005); and Victorian Freaks: The Social Context of Freakery in Britain (Columbus: The Ohio State University Press, 2008); and in the journal Nineteenth-Century Gender Studies. Her poem “The Hymn of a Fat Woman” was published in Gargoyle, and she has an essay forthcoming in The Fat Studies Reader (New York: New York University Press).

NIKOLE KING recently received her doctorate in English from the University of California, Riverside and is an adjunct instructor in English at Gonzaga University in Spokane, Washington. Her dissertation, “Men’s Physique: Standards of Embodiment and Middle-Class Masculinity in Nineteenth-Century British and American Fiction,” examines the size and shape of the male body as it is represented in Victorian fiction as well as different body-shaping behaviors practiced by men in order to excavate the construction of masculinity during the nineteenth century. She also maintains an interest in student development and holds a master’s degree in College Student Personnel from Bowling Green State University in Bowling Green, Ohio.

ELENA LEVY-NAVARRO, Associate Professor of English at the University of Wisconsin, has published widely in cultural and literary studies. Her interests lie in Renaissance studies, fat studies, historiography, and body studies more generally. Her book The Culture of Obesity in Early and Late Modernity: Body Image in Shakespeare, Jonson, Middleton, and Skelton (Houndmills, Basingstoke, Hampshire: Palgrave Macmillan, 2008) is the first to consider the construction of fatness in the Renaissance period.

GRETA RENSENBRINK is Assistant Professor of History at Marshall University, specializing in the late-twentieth-century United States, gender, sexuality, and the history of the body. She is at work on her first book, tentatively titled After All the Straight Women Left the Movement: Lesbians, Body Politics and Grassroots Feminism in the late 1970s and early 1980s.

COOKIE WOOLNER is a graduate student in the University of Michigan’s joint History/Women’s Studies Ph.D. program. Her work focuses on gender, sexuality, and performance in nineteenth- and twentieth-century American culture. The former editor of the early 1990s riot grrl zine, Girl Fiend, she has been published in books such as Girl Power edited by Hillary Carlip and It’s So You, an anthology on feminism and fashion edited by Michelle Tea. She was the drummer for the infamous all-female punk band Subtonix and has performed in the burlesque troupes The Original Fat Bottom Revue and The Chainsaw Chubbettes.