ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS:
We extend our gratitude to the many people who contributed their time, insight, and expertise to this project. We are grateful for the excellent research and analysis conducted by Casandra Havens, Isabelle Hutchings, and Christopher Yandel, law students at the Samuelson Law, Technology & Public Policy Clinic at Berkeley Law.

Special thanks to Professors Patricia Aufderheide and Peter Jaszi for their invaluable guidance and support throughout the project. Their book, Reclaiming Fair Use, provided background instrumental to this project, as well as content that was adapted for use in this guide. This project would not have been possible without the fair use practices and limitations identified by authorial communities in their respective statements of practices. We thank the documentary filmmaker, journalism, media studies, online video, open courseware, poetry, scholarly research in communications, and visual arts communities for the insights we gained from their respective statements of best practices.
We are also grateful to the nonfiction authors and copyright experts who generously shared their experiences in interviews and survey responses. This guide would not be a useful resource for the nonfiction author community without the benefit of their stories and knowledge.

We are indebted to Michael C. Donaldson, Jacqueline Lipton, Jessica Litman, Pamela Samuelson, Rebecca Tushnet, Jennifer M. Urban and Molly Shaffer Van Houweling for their review and helpful comments on drafts of this guide. Mistakes are ours alone.

Finally, thank you to all Authors Alliance members: Your support makes all our projects possible.
