Acknowledgments

Many people have been indispensable for this research. To Rinus Penninx and Jack Burgers I owe the wise guidance and sharp criticism that have helped me through this journey. I am also grateful to the organisations that sponsored my research and made it possible: Fundación Caja Madrid, Fundació Jaume Bofil, the European Commission via its Marie Curie RTN Urb-Europe network, and the IMES institute. Maggie Schmitt and Paulina Jiménez also deserve a very special place in these acknowledgments: thanks to their careful English editing and useful comments, the quality of this book improved substantially. Thanks also to Ana and Oriol, Lide and Pako, for housing me during my fieldwork in Barcelona, and to all the women thanks to whose work and help I have been able to write this book, particularly to Maiza Campos Ponce, Sara Claramunt, and Tatjana Crnjovic; and to my husband Tom and my parents for taking care of my daughter during the weekends, holidays and periods when I went in retreat.

A very special thank-you goes to a small and loyal club of colleagues and friends who have comprised my daily front-office in recent years. Blanca Garces Mascareñas, Lisa Peters and Javier Moreno Fuentes have been my most constant supporters and friends throughout the whole process, even in the distance. At the end of the journey, Elif Kerskiner, Manolis Pratsinakis and Yannis Tzaninis have been the most important friends, encouraging me not to despair towards the end, and feeding me constantly with useful criticism and interesting intellectual challenges. Elke Winters, María Villares and Maria del Mar Griera also belonged to this club during some parts of the trajectory.

To a very large extent, I am indebted to all my informants, as without their cooperation my study would have simply not been possible. In Rot-tterdam, I am thinking above all of Hennie de Beer, Olivia van Roon and Ronald van Veen. I am particularly grateful to Eddie Meijers, the man who opened the schools’ doors for me in the first place, and who helped me against all odds to update the statistical data in Rotterdam. In Barcelona, I am particularly grateful to Montse Chamorro, Pilar Ferrer, Albert Grau, Empar Soler, José Ruiz, Isabel Almecija, Marisa Alonso and Sagrario Mir, and to Pepi Soto, who gave me some of my best contacts in schools.

My gratitude also goes to all those who have read and commented on my work in its various versions: Kees Groenendijk, Javier Moreno Fuentes, Elif Kerskiner, Carlos Bruquetas Callejo, Mar Griera, Alberto Martín, Martha Montero-Sieburth, Joanne van der Leun, Virginie Guiraudon, Patrick Ireland and Dvora Yanow. Special thanks to Hassan Bousetta and to Han Entzinger, for sending me their work; both have been an important source of inspiration in many ways. I also remember Sandra Gil very strongly, for inspiring me in the very beginning with her ideas and enthusiasm. I want to thank my colleagues at IMES who have given me lots of input and emotional support, and above all: Mies van Niekerk, Floris Vermeulen, Jeroen Doomernik, Aimee Rendonks, Marcel Maussen, Laure Michon, Anja van Heelsum, Boris Slijper, Flip Lindo, Rick Wolff, Maurice Crul, Karina Hof, Marlene de Vries, Mayida Zaal and Parveen Akhtar. I am indebted to all of my colleagues in the UGIS network, starting with Javier Moreno Fuentes and Andrés Walliser, for inviting me to join them in the UGIS team, and in particular to Irene Molina, Inge van Nieuwenhuyzen, Thea Dukes, Karien Dekker, Rogger Andersson, Hans Anderson and Ronald van Kempen.

I dedicate my work to my family, in particular to Elisa and to Tom, to my parents, to Carlos, Eva and Violeta, and to my aunts Marisa and Fuencisla Galán. My aunts migrated to Mexico with the Spanish republican exodus after Franco’s coup d’état, and their reception in Mexico was not without difficulties, in spite of the support that the president Lázaro Cárdenas offered to Spanish exiles. As they put it: the government wanted us but the Mexican people didn’t. My aunts were the first ones to inspire me with the idea of a gap between integration policies and their implementation.
