This book is the result of eight years of life, research, and writing. During this time, I broke three cars (once while trying to reach and interview an activist), relocated to ten different houses and three different countries, changed methodological approach and research questions, and met about 200 water activists in different parts of Italy and Europe. First, I would like to thank every one of them: you opened the doors of your assemblies, organizations, and houses, spending precious hours with me while you were fighting and winning one of the most important political battles of your and our lives. Above all, I am particularly grateful to the Segreteria Operativa of the Forum: in 2011, I discovered at the Rialto Sant’Ambrogio an incredible laboratory of ideas, observing exceptional levels of professionalism and dedication to a cause. Remixing the words of one of the members of this group, I can say ‘Quelle settimane con Luca seduto accanto a Nino furono belle’. Furthermore, special thanks go to the activists and friends who shared with me the experience of Marseille, and, in particular, to two activists from Genoa, who decided to reveal to me very important news during a dinner on the hills that surround the city.

My second thought goes to Bretz’Selle, a Strasbourg-based community of political thinkers, fellows of Anaxagore, artists, makers, and feminists, which strongly supported the production of this book. Bretz’Selle, thank you for the countless tools that you gave me in these last two years: you increased my level of self-confidence, and showed me new forms of learning and teaching.

I am grateful to the European University Institute and to the academic community of COSMOS, the assorted bunch of social movement scholars that Donatella della Porta gathered together in Florence. Within this group, I dedicate a special place to my dear friend Alice Mattoni, to Riccardo Emilio Chesta, and to Lars Erik Berntzen, but also to Marion, Frank, Caterina, Pietro, Matteo, Markos, Massimiliano, Chiara, Salvatore, Helge, and Lorenzo (all of them). Furthermore, I would like to thank those people who contributed to my professional development during these years: Federico Da Rold, Chiara Cassese, Mario Diani, Claudia Padovani, Francesca Forno, Alexandra Segerberg, Paola Migliorati, Katarzyna and Kajtek Gracz, Adriana Bessa, Jonathan Bright, Letizia Vettor, Letizia Cassarà, Ludovic Chevalier, Valentin Reinhard, Sacha Pelletier, Estelle Schmitt, Justin Timmel, Robin Faivre. Thank you for having encouraged my steps, for having shared with me your invaluable technical expertise, and for having discussed with me why we research, experiment, and teach.
I am particularly grateful to the co-editors of this series, James Jasper and Jan Willem Duyvendak, who contributed to this book with their suggestions and their informal support, and to Vanessa de Brueger and Marina Jongkind for their persistent help.

A final thought goes to the members of my family. I am grateful to my parents, Gianna and Paolo, who gave up several holidays in order to sustain my work, and to Alessandro, who kept my curiosity about the world alive. A more than special thanks goes to my two dearest loves, Natalia Allega and Anna Cernison Allega: with energy and determination, they permitted me to dedicate a considerable amount of time to this book, in a phase that I should (or I would) have devoted only to ourselves. Anna, Natalia, I am sorry, thank you, and I hope we played enough. Os quiero mucho. Mucho mucho!
