ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This book would not have been possible without the support of many people in, at the margins of, and outside of academic institutions.

The Research Institute for History and Culture and later, the Institute for Cultural Inquiry at Utrecht University provided a stimulating and supportive research environment during the four and a half years of research that form the basis of this book.

Archivists and curators at the various archives that I visited were very helpful; I wish to thank especially the volunteers at the smaller ones for taking time to welcome me: Brigitte Aust and Erich Knokke at the Fairground Museum in Essen, Aly de Boer at the Museum Sloten, Cor den Boer at the Archives of the Society for Common Benefits at Edam and Frido Troost at the Institute of Concrete Matter in Haarlem.

Without the support of private collectors, I would not have gotten access to this rich corpus of popular visual media; although an increasing (academic) attention to ephemera and objects of popular visual culture generates new initiatives in the heritage sector, such objects have been generally not widely preserved in the big national archives. I am deeply indebted to Richard Balzer, Charles Barten, Sjaak Boone, Daan Budding, Mark Butterworth, Richard Crangle, Annett Duller, Jack Judson, Wim van Keulen, Henk B. Kranenburg, Tom Rall, Gwen Sebus and Michael van de Leur, Joke Sebus, Henc de Roo, Lester Smith, Martin Vliegenthart, Helmut Wälde, Thomas Weynants, Monique Wezenberg, and everyone else who checked their boxes and attics but did not find material that was relevant to my work. I cherish the moments of working in their collections and am very grateful for the time they made for my research; for their confidence of letting me investigate precious objects; for sharing their invaluable collector’s knowledge; and for sometimes doing research themselves to answer my questions. Thank you also for providing me with photos and scans of any object I was interested in. Your kindness and generosity are incredible.

I would like to express my special thanks to Gwen Sebus, who spent countless hours with identifying and scanning the slides on the Netherlands in her collection, always eager to discuss and compare new findings with me right away. She also introduced me to the practical side of being a lanternist, which refined my understanding of the medium and is a lot of fun, too. My second special thanks go to Richard Crangle who has provided me with copies of catalogues and lantern readings and who modified the Lucerna Magic Lantern Web Resource according to my research demands in no time.

Finally, I wish to thank the staff at Amsterdam University Press for all their help, not least for agreeing to include this many illustrations.
