It would be impossible for me to list all the people I would like to thank, given that the six years of research upon which this book is based were filled with encounters that helped it to come to fruition. However, I must first thank all those who participated in the study, and in particular those who provided their life histories, and who were so exceptionally welcoming, open, trusting and generous: many thanks to all of you!

This research was conducted in the social sciences research laboratory at the École Normale Supérieure in Paris. This collective environment provided both the intellectual and personal nourishment for this research, thanks to the stimulating exchanges, opinions, and perspectives of my colleagues and friends, which were a veritable driving force during these years.

I would also like to thank those who encouraged and helped me to pursue the translation of this book into English, in particular Florence Haegel, Nonna Mayer and Johanna Siméant. Many thanks also to Julien Boelaert, Olivier Fillieule, Paul Pasquali and Etienne Ollion for their valuable advice concerning the translation of certain tricky technical and conceptual terms!

I would also like to particularly thank Jim Jasper for his interest in this book, and for his proposal to publish the translation within his collection “Protest and Social Movements” with Amsterdam University Press. My thanks also to the editorial team of the collection, particularly Jan W. Duyvendack and Vanessa de Bueger.

This translation would not have been possible without financial assistance from CERAPS (Centre d'études et de recherches administratives, politiques et sociales), from the University of Lille 2, and from the LabEx TEPSIS at the EHESS (ANR-11-LABX-0067). I am deeply grateful for this institutional support.

Above all, I would like to thank Katharine Throssell, who translated this book and to whom I am much indebted, for her availability and responsiveness, her professionalism, and the quality of our exchanges!

Finally, there are those I would like to thank on a more personal level; in particular, my parents, Agnès and Jean-Jacques, to whom this book is dedicated. Words are not enough to express my thanks to Fabrice, who has been by my side since the beginning of this adventure, and to our two children Nino and Lalou, who never failed to help me stay the course!
