George Rochberg, American Composer

Wlodarski, Amy Lynn

Published by University of Rochester Press

Wlodarski, Amy Lynn.
George Rochberg, American Composer: Personal Trauma and Artistic Creativity.
University of Rochester Press, 2019.
Project MUSE. muse.jhu.edu/book/73402.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/73402
Acknowledgments

Funding for this project was generously provided by a series of grants from the Paul Sacher Stiftung, the National Endowment for the Humanities, and the Dickinson College Research and Development Committee. I am also grateful to Dickinson College for publication subventions associated with this project and to Ben Sweger and Glen Peterman in the Sponsored Projects Office for helping me prepare and revise external grant applications.

The entire staff at the Paul Sacher Stiftung deserves my deepest gratitude; you were my family for a year—thank you for welcoming me so warmly. I especially wish to thank Felix Meyer, Heidy Zimmerman, and Tina Kilvio Tüscher (to whom this book is lovingly dedicated). Thank you also to the staff at the New York Public Library Performing Arts Division; J. J. Ahern and Timothy Horning at the University of Pennsylvania Archives; Chad Daniels (museum director) at Camp Shelby, Mississippi; Anne Rhodes at the Oral History of American Music Archive, Yale University; Scott Schwartz at the University of Illinois Archives; Lee Anne Tuason at the Julliard School Archives; and Eric Van Slander at the National Archives. Thanks also to Veit Arlt at the University of Basel for hosting my family so graciously during our year in Switzerland.

Sonia Kane and Ralph Locke of the University of Rochester Press believed in this project from the beginning, and I am grateful to them both for their guidance and ideas. Thank you to Julia Cook, Tracey Engel, and Cheryl Carnahan for their help with the final stages of preparation and to my anonymous reviewers for their pointed and spot-on advice about how to improve the manuscript. I am in your debt. Thank you to David Czyz and David Glasgow for helping to engrave the musical examples and to Ann Folger who provided key bibliographic support. Individuals at the Dickinson College Library also helped with challenging interlibrary loan requests (even when I was abroad); I would be remiss not to mention Kirk Doran specifically for his help with seemingly impossible research requests. I am also grateful to Kate Brett from Cambridge University Press, who provided sound counsel at a pivotal moment in the process.

The following individuals provided permission to publish copyrighted archival material or correspondence that appears in this book: Mimi Adam (Alexander Ringer); Marilyn Albert (Stephen Albert); Byron Au Yong; William Bolcom; Robert Carl; George Crumb; Betty Anne Dugan (Milton Babbitt); Jon Forshee; Jeremy Gill; Stephen Hartke; Martin Herman; Stephen Jaffe; Shirley Perle (George Perle); Jim Primosch; Francesca Rochberg (George and Gene Rochberg); Michael Alex Rose; and Greg Wilder. A version of chapter two appeared in shortened form as “George Rochberg’s Road to Ars Combinatoria, 1943–63,” Journal of the Society of American Music 12 (2018): 119–50. A short excerpt from chapter four appeared as “George Rochberg as Secular Kabbalist,” Mitteilungen der Paul Sacher Stiftung 31 (2018): 49–53.

Stimulating conversations with colleagues also fed the pages of this book. Thank you to Abby Anderton, Andrea Bohlman, Joy Calico, Hermann Danauser, Sabine Feisst, Jeremy Gill, Loren Kajikawa, John Kapusta, Nitsa Kann, Andrea Lieber, Marie Sumner Lott, David Metzer, Laura Möckli, Wendy Moffat, Brett Pearson, Karl Qualls, Wei Ren, Kay Kaufman Shelemay, Anne Shreffler, Martha Sprigge, and Steve Swayne. Two scholars deserve specific mention for their critical reading of large portions of this manuscript: Elise Bartosik-Velez and Lily Hirsch. I am so grateful for our friendships and collaborations—you both make me a better scholar and a happier person.

Thank you to my parents, Fred and Terri Wlodarski, for their continued support of my career and for letting me and my family live with them one summer when we were between sabbatical residences. I would never have found my way through the afterword without the help of my sister, Jennifer Wlodarski, MD, who helped me make sense of the technical language surrounding moral injury and provided excellent insight into the psychological suffering of war veterans. Thank you to Julie Ball for helping us place our children in such supportive educational settings and to the Swiss International School and the Bilingual Kids Academy for providing safe and loving communities for them. Thank you to Kathy Abbott, Sandra Alfers, Angela Baade, Erin Brenner, and Heather Champion for being the lifelong friends one always hopes for and rarely finds. Your emotional support during this project was more important than you might have realized.

Family was at the heart of this project, and it would not have come to fruition without the charity they showed me. I am indebted beyond words to Francesca (Chessie) Rochberg for allowing me unrestricted access to her father’s diaries, letters, papers, photographs, and scores. I am also deeply humbled to have met with Rochberg’s widow, Gene, only a few years before she passed away. Our conversation about love, loss, and music on a beautiful summer afternoon is one I will never forget. Finally, to my family, without whom I would have no purpose. Benjamin and Ellie, you are the two most loving children a working parent could hope for. I love exploring and learning about this world with both of you. And in words too small to convey their expanse, thanks to Jeremy for realizing how much this project meant to me and coming along on the adventure as a friend and partner-in-arms. I love you so very much.