Inyenzi means cockroach, which is of course accurate. Originally the word inyenzi had a positive connotation, in the Tutsi royal movement that dominated Rwanda throughout the 1960s and 1970s...Alfred Lugendo explained that inyenzi is the acronym of ‘Inganguruzo bwa kubure’ which means ‘cockroaches that live in the bush’. Therefore inyenzi means ‘a nuisance of cockroaches who has committed himself to bravery.’...More broadly, inganguruzo then means troublemakers. Lugendo stated that his supporters chose the label, cut extremists from it, to whom it is attributed in many writings on the 1994 Rwanda genocide.

In the 1980s and 1970s, inyenzi would attack at night and kill innocent civilians. Then they would rapidly vanish in the countryside or retreat into Burundi, Tanzania, Uganda or Zaire. Because of this ability to terrorise the country and to spread the population associated the attackers with cockroaches named population of bravery.

Royal Museum for Central Africa

The 1897 International Exhibition [in Brussels] piqued scientific interest in the people and animals of Central Africa, thus King Leopold II decided to build on his promotion of Congo.

At the entrance to Belgium’s Museum for Central Africa stands a giant golden statue of a European missionary with an African boy clutching his robes, along with a plaque that reads: “Belgium brings civilization to Congo”.

The statue and some of the exhibits inside anger many visitors.
