Introduction

Thomas Hoccleve’s Series is a text that is difficult to define. It is a collection of poems, ranging from a complaint about Hoccleve’s mental illness, to a dialogue with a friend, and finally, a copy of Lerne to Die and translations from the Gesta Romanorum. The selections from the latter include Jer’eslaus’ Wife—an analogue of the Constance story, similar to The Man of Law’s Tale and Gower’s Tale of Constance—and the Tale of Jonathas, which echoes The Squire’s Tale and focuses on a son who squanders three magical gifts. These various works, discrete in nature, nevertheless form a larger, unified whole, as each text suggests something of Hoccleve’s life to which he often alludes. Indeed, often nakedly autobiographical, the Series nevertheless blurs the line between fact and fiction, as Hoccleve’s fictional moralizations are introduced by his own struggles with a mental illness, which, according to Hoccleve, have been all too real. In his beginning exposition of his illness and subsequent dialogue with a nameless “Friend,” Hoccleve makes clear the severity of his mental break and the resulting alienation from London society. The dialogue with the friend which follows makes clear that Hoccleve’s recovery is presumably not complete, and he needs help and encouragement—even prodding—to continue writing. The dialogue then turns to matters of patronage, and the Duke of Gloucester, before returning to harm and pain.

One of the focal points of this pain is the damage done to Hoccleve’s own reputation through rumor and gossip about his extended mental illness, and these rumors introduce that Hoccleve, like his former friends, has allowed rumor and reputation to harm those who don’t deserve it, namely, women. Indeed, as Hoccleve is aware and as the dialogue with the friend suggests, Hoccleve acknowledges that his writings have hurt women, by voicing false narratives like the ones he hears about his own recovery from mental illness. This writing, centered on women, becomes a reflection of the gossip, which centers on him, and spreads the story of his mental breakdown. Then by taking his own alienation into account, Hoccleve seems to internalize his own malady as reason to repent and make amends. Indeed, this malady or sickness is inseparable from the work’s larger focus on the instability of the world, and the need to act moral and with virtue in spite of inhospitable circumstances, themes which the tales from the Gesta Romanorum and Lerne to Die make manifest. In a world where mental stability and health is no more secure than the seasons which change regularly, it is important to live as though each day is one’s last.

But we should keep in mind that Hoccleve’s poem gestures to a complex view of impairment and disability in fifteenth-century England. The difference between impairments and disability is a topic handled well by the Series. Impairment might simply signal some kind of bodily or mental difference from an imagined norm, as his own self-reported illness certainly does (at least in his telling). But his dialogue with his friend and complaint about the instability of social ties and friendship highlight that disabilities are often those impairments which elicit a social response or hinder some kind of communal relationship. Like a modern disability, Hoccleve’s mental illness affects his employment and the quality of his life. Part of Hoccleve’s Complaint is that, long after his illness has ended, gossip about the illness remains, and this cloud of suspicion makes recovery practically impossible. The expectation, Hoccleve tells us, is that he would relapse, due to his age and health. Here is a place we might see how impairment becomes disability, as the mental illness affects Hoccleve’s employment and his status in London. His dialogue with his friend makes clear just how an impairment—according to Hoccleve, a mental breakdown caused by a variety of factors—might become disability once it affects one’s social status or access to employment. Indeed, the opening Complaint—printed in full here—voices the fears Hoccleve’s contemporaries have for his possible relapse. But the poems actually suggest that the disability is not the issue, but the quality of relationships and brokenness of the world, which make any deviation from the temporary fiction of the able body and mind fatal to one’s standing in the personal and professional world of fifteenth-century London. According to Hoccleve, the fiction of the able body is a temporary one. Given enough time or age, one will encounter deviations from a bodily or mental norm (however fictional that norm may be). So, Hoccleve’s words—that nothing stops change and can protect one from illness—reflect something similar: wealth, youth, all fail in the face of outside circumstances.

Finally, Hoccleve’s Series is a wonderful example of the developing role of medical figures and late medieval attempts to reconcile science and medicine with religion, as Hoccleve ends the Complaint with a revaluation of corporeal trials become a way to rid oneself of spiritual malady tying the brokenness of Hoccleve’s mind and body to the healing of his spirit, a connection suggested by the image of Christ as surgeon. The Complaint, therefore, in particular, offers a rich vocabulary for the medicalization of impairments, speaking of Hoccleve’s diseas, maladye, or wylde infirmite. Healing, of course, comes, but through less than scientific or strictly medical means. Hoccleve finds a book with a dialogue featuring an allegorical Reason and internalizes the words as medicine. The Complaint ends, and the Dialogue begins, appropriately with Hoccleve viewing Christ as the physician, a connection made in other works of the period, as the growing power of medical figures became a symbol of God’s grace.

Bibliography

Doob, Penelope B.R. Nebuchadnezzar’s Children: Conventions of Madness in Middle English Literature. Yale University Press, 1974.

After that hervest Inned° has his sheves,"n And that the broune season of Myhelm-esse° was come, and gan the trees robbe of ther leves, That grene had bene and in lusty fressh-nesse and them in-to colowre of yelownesse had dyen and doune throwne under foote, that chaunge sank into myne herte roote.° For freshely brough't it to my remem-braunce,° that stablenes" in this world there is none. There is no thinge but chaunge and variaunce: how welthye a man be or well be-gone, endure it shall not he shall it for-gon," death the under fote shall hym thrist adowne:° that is every wites° conclusyon. Whiche for to weyve is in no mannes myght, how riche he be stronge, lusty, freshe, and gay. and in the end of Novembar, upon a nyght, syghenge° sore as I in my bed lay, for this and othar thowghts whiche many a day before I toke sleape cam none in myne eye, so vexyd me the thowghtfull maladye." I see well, sythen I with sycknes last was scourged, clowdy° hath bene the favoure that shone me. Full bright in tymes past, the sonne abatid, and the derke showre hildyd° downe right on me, and in langour he made swyme so that my wite to lyve no lust hadd, ne delyte. The grefe abowte my herte so swal° and bolned° evar to and to so sore, that nedes oute I must there with all. I thought I nolde° it kepe cloos no more, ne lett it in me, for to olde and hore," and for to preve I cam of a woman, I brast° oute on the morowe and thus began. Allmyghty god, as lykethe his goodnes, visyrthe the folks alday, as men may se, with lose of good and bodily sikenese, and among othar, he forgat nat me. Witnes upon the wyld infirmytie," which that I had, as many a man well knewe, and whiche me ow't of my selfe cast and threw. It was so known to the people and kouthe° that cownsell was it none ne none be myght;° how it with me stode was in every mans mowthe, and that full sore my fryndes affright. They for myne helthe pilgrimages hight and sowght them, some on hors and some on foote, God yelde it them—to get me bote." But althowghe the substaunce of my memory went to pley, as for a certayne space, yet the lord of vertew,° the kynge of glory, of his highe myght and benyng grace, made it to returne in-to the place whence it cam, whiche at all hallwe messe,° was five yeere neyther more ne lesse. And evere sythen—thanked be God our Lord, of his good reconciliacion—my wyt and I have been of suche ac-corde 60 as we were or the alteracion° of it was, but by my savacion, that tyme have I be sore sett on fire and lyved in great torment and mar-tire.° For thowgh that my wit were home came agayne, men wolde it not so understond or take with me to deale, hadden they dys-dayne. A ryotows° person I was and forsake, myn olde frindshipe was ovarshake,° no wyte° withe me lyst° make daliance, the worlde me made a straunge con- tinuance," whiche that myne herte sore gan tor-ment. For ofte whan I, in Westmynster Hall, and eke in London, among the prese° went, I se the chere abaten and apalle° of them that weren wonte me for to calle to companye; her° heed they caste a-wry, when I them mette as they not me sye. As seide is in the sauter° might I say, they that me sye fledden awey fro me, forgotten I was all owte of mynde away, as he that dede was from herres cherte;° to a loste vessell lickened myght I be; for many a wyght abowte me dwellynge, herd I me blame and putte in dispreis-inge." Thus spake many one and seye by me: 'Althowghe from hym his siknesse savage withdrawne and passyd, as for a tyme be, resorte it wole, namely in suche age as he is of; and thanne my visage bygan to glowe for the woo° and fere Tho wordis, them unwar," cam to myn ere: 'Whane passinge hete is,' quod they, 'trustyth this, assaille° hym wole agayne that maladie.' And yet, parde," they token them amise: none effect at all toke there prophecie. Manie someres ben past sithen remedye of that, god of his grace me purveide:" Thanked be God—it shope° nought as they seide! What fall shall what men so deme° or gesse, 90 to hym that wott° every mans secre resvyd is. It is a lewdnesse° men wyser them pretende then they be, and no wight° knoweth he it he or she, whom, how ne whan God wole hym visete. It happeneth ofte whan men wene° it lite. Some tyme I wend as lite as any man, for to have fall into that wildenesse but God, whan hym list may, wole and can, helthe withdrawe and send a wyght sycknesse.

Thowghe man be well this day, no sykernesse to hym bhlīght\(^a\) is that it shall endure: God hurte now can and nowe hele and cure. He suffrith longe at the laste he smit; whane that a man is in prosperite, To drede a fall comynge it is a wit. Who so that takethe hede ofte may se This worldis change and mutabilite\(^a\) in sondry wyse, howe nedeth not expresse: To my mater streight wole I me dresse

Men sayden I loked as a wilde steer, and so mye loke abowt I gan to throwe; myne heed to hie\(^°\) another side I beer,\(^°\) ful bukkyshe\(^°\) is his brayne, well may I trowe, and sayde the thirde and apt is in the rowe to site of them that a resounles\(^°\) reed\(^°\) Can geve no sadnesse is in his heed. Chaungid had I my pas some seiden eke, for here and there forthe stirte I as a Roo\(^°\)— none abode, none arrest, but all brain-seke.

Another spake and of me seide also, my feete weren aye wavynge to and fro whane that I stonde shulde and withe men talke and that myne eyne sowghten every halke.\(^°\) I leide an ere aye to as I by wente, and herde all, and thus in myne herte I cast: of longe abdyngy here I may repent; leste, of hastinesse I at the last answere amyse best is hens\(^°\) hye fast. For yf I in this preace amysse me gye, to harme will it me turne and to folly. And this I demyd well and knew well eke," whatsoeuer I shuld answere or sey, they wold not have holde it worthe a leke.\(^°\) For why, as I hadd lost my tonges key, kepte I me cloos, and trussyd\(^°\) me my wey, drowpynge\(^°\) and hevye\(^°\) and all woo bystaid: small cause had I, me thowght, to be glade. My spirits laboryd bysly to peinte countaunce chere and loke, for that men spake of me so wonderingly, and for the very shame and fere I qwoke,\(^°\) thowghe myne herte had been dypped in the broke. It wete and moyste I now was of my swot,\(^°\) whiche was nowe frostye colde and now fiery hoot. And in my chamber at home when I was my selfe alone, I in this wyse wrowght.\(^°\) I streit unto my myrrowr\(^°\) and my glas, to loke how that me of my chere thowght yf any were it than it owght, for fayne wolde I, yf it had not be right, amendyd it to my kunynge\(^°\) and myght.\(^°\) Many a sawte\(^°\) made I to this myrrowre, thinkynge, 'Yf that I loke in this manere amonge folke as I now do, none errowr of suspecte loke may in my face appere, this continuance, I am surem and this chere,
If I forthe use is no thinge reprevable to them that have conseytes\textsuperscript{a} resonalbe.' And therewithall I thought thus anon:

170 ‘Men in theyr owne case bene blynd alday, as I haue hard say many a day agon, and in that plyght\textsuperscript{b} I stonde may. How shall I doo, which is the best way, my troubled spirit, for to bringe ar rest?

Yf I wist howe, fayne\textsuperscript{c} wolde I do the best.' Sythen I recoveryd was have I full ofte cawse had of angre and ympacience,\textsuperscript{d} where I borne have it esely and softe, sufferynge wronge be done to me, and offence, 180 and nowght answeryd ageyn, but kept sylence, lest that men of me deme would, and seyne, ‘Se how this man is fallen in agayne!’ As that I ones\textsuperscript{e} fro Westmynster cam, vexid full grevously withe thowghtfull hete, thus thought I: ‘a great fole I am, this pavyment a dayes thus to bete, and in and out, labour fast and swete, wonderinge and hevynes to purchace, sythen I stand out of all favor and grace.’

190 And then thought I on that othar syde: ‘If that I not be sene amonge the prees,’ men deme wele that I myne heade hyde, and am worse than I am—it is no lees.’ O lorde, so my spirite was restles, I sowght reste and I not it found, but aye was trouble, redy at myn hond. I may not lett a man to ymagine ferre above the mone\textsuperscript{f} yf that hym lyst: thereby the sowthe he may not deter-myn.

200 But by the pref\textsuperscript{g} bene things knowne and wiste, many a dome\textsuperscript{h} is wrappyd in the myst; man by his dedes, and not by his lokes, shall knowne be, as it is writen in bokes. By taste of frewte,\textsuperscript{i} men may well wete and knowe what that it is—othar pref is there none; every man wott wel that, as that I trowe, right so they that demen my witt is gone, as yet this day there demythe many a one I am not well: may, as I by them goo, taste and assay yf it be so or noo.

210 Upon a looke is harde, men them to grownde what a man is, thereby the sothe is hid; whither his wittes seke bene or sounde, by cowtynaunce it is not wist ne kyd.\textsuperscript{j} Thowghe a man harde have ones bene bityde, God shilde\textsuperscript{k} it shuld on hym contynue alway: by comunynge is the best assay. I mean to comon of things mene, for I am but right lewde dowtles\textsuperscript{l} and ygnoraunte, my cunnynge is full lene, yet homly reason know I nevartheles; not hope I founden be so resonles as men demen—Marie, Christ forbede! I can no more preve may the dede. If a man ones fall in dronkenesse, shall he contynue therein evar mo? Nay, thowgh the man doo in drinkynge excesse so ferforthe\textsuperscript{m} that not speake he ne can, ne goo, and his wittes welly\textsuperscript{n} ben refte\textsuperscript{o} hym froo,

\textsuperscript{a}conseytes mental faculties \textsuperscript{b}plyght trouble \textsuperscript{c}fayne happily \textsuperscript{d}ympacience impatience \textsuperscript{e}ones \textsuperscript{f}mone moon \textsuperscript{g}prefe proof \textsuperscript{h}dome judgment \textsuperscript{i}frewte fruit \textsuperscript{j}wist ne kyd \textsuperscript{k}shilde shield \textsuperscript{l}dowtles doubtless \textsuperscript{m}ferforthe far and buried in the Cuppe," he afterward comythe to hym selfe agayne, ellis were it hard.
Right so, thoughghe my witt were a pilgrime, and went fer fro home, he cam agayne.
God me voydyd of this grevous venyme that had enfectyd and wildyd my brayne.
Se how the curtese leche most sovereyne, unot the sycke, gevythe medisyne in nede and hym relevythe of his peyne.
Now let this passe, God wott, many a man semythe full wyse by cowntenauce and chere, whiche, and he tastyd were what he can, men myghten licken hym to a fooles pere.

And some man lokereth in folryshe maner, as to the outward dome and judgement, that as the prese descree is and prudent.
But algates, howe so be my countynaunce, debate is now none bywyxt and my wit, allthowghe there were a dysseveraunce, as for a tyme, betwyxt me and it.

The greater harme is myne, that never yet was I well lettered, prudent and discrete;
there nevar stode yet wyse man on my fete.
The sothe is this: suche conceit as I had, and undarstondynge, all were it but small, byfore that my wyts wearen unsad—thanked be Owr Lord Ihesu Crist of all!— suche have I now, but blowe is ny ovar all the reverse, where thorwgh the mornynge whiche cawsethe me thus syge in complaynynge.

Sythen my good fortune hathe changed his chere, yhe time is me to crepe into my grace, to lyve loyles, what do I here?
I, in my herte, can no gladnes have;
I may but small sey, but yf men deme I rave, sythen othar thinge the woo may I none grype.
unto my sepulture ame I nowe ripe.
My well, adwe farwell, my good fortune!
Out of your tables, me playned have ye; sythen well ny eny wight for to comune with me lothe is, farwell prosperitie!
I am no lengar of your lyverye! Ye have me put out of your remembrance; adewe my good adventure and good chaunce!
And as swithe after thus bythowght I me:
yf that I in this wyse me despeyre, it is purchase of more adversytye.
What nederthe it, my feble wit appeire; sythe god hathe made myne helthe home repayre blessed be he, and what men deme or speke suffre it—thinke I and me not on me wreke." But some dele had I reioysynge amonge, and gladnese also in my spirite, that thowghe the people toke them mis and wronge

me demynghe of my sycknesse not quite,
yet for they compleyned the hevy plite that they had sene me in with tendernesse
of hertes cherte, my grefe was the lesse.
In them put I no defawlte but one:
that I was hole," they not ne deme kowlde,
and day and day, they se me by them gon
in heate and colde, and neythar still nor lowde,
knew they me do suspectly a dirke clowde yeir syght obscuryd within and without,
and for all that were they in suche a dowt.
Axiad have they full ofte sythe, and freined
of my fellows of the prive seale° and preyd them to tell them with hert unfeynyd,
how it stode wyth me, whither yll or well.
And they the sothe told them every dell,
but they helden ther words not but les:
they myghten as well have holden ther pes.
This troubly lyfe hathe all to longe enduryd,
not have I wyst how in my skynne to turne.
But now my selfe to my selfe have ensured,
for no suche wondrynge aftar this to morne:
as longe as my lyfe shall in me soiorne,"° of suche ymaginyngye, I not ne reche."°

Lat them drem as them lyst and speke and dreche."°
This othar day, a lamentacion
of a wofull man in a bok I sye, to whome words of consolation Reason gave, spekyngge effectually, and well easyd my herte was therby.
For when I had a while, in the bok red, with the speche of Reason was I well fed.
This hevy man, wofull and angwyssh-iows° compleyned in this wyse and seyd he:
‘my lyfe is unto me full encomberows;° for whithar or unto what place I flye, my wyckednesses evar followe me, as men may se the shadow of a body swe,"° and in no maner I may them eschwe."° Vexation of spirite and torment lake I right none I have them plente.
Wondarly byttar is my taast and sent;° wo be the tyme of my natyvyte, unhappy man that evar shuld it be!
O deathe, they strooke, a salve is of sweetnes
to them that lyven in suche wretchednes.
Gretar plesaunce were it to dye,
by many folde, than for to lyve soo.
Sorows so many in me multiplye, that my lyfe is to me a very foo;
comfortyd may I not be of my woo;
of my distrese se none end I can,
no force how sone I stinte° to be a man.
Than spake Reason: ‘What menythe all this fare?
Thowghe welthe be not frindly to the yet,
out of thyn herte voyde wo and care!’° ‘By what skyll how, and by what rede and wit,’ yeid this wofull man, ‘myght I done it?’°
'Wrastle,' qwode Reason, 'agayne hevynesses of the worlde, troubles, suffring and duresses.
Behold how many a man suffreth the des-seas°
as great as thow and all a way greatar;
and thowghe it them pinche, sharply and ses,
yet, paciently, they it suffar and bere:
thynde here on and the lesse it shall the dere,
suche sufferaunce is of mans gylt° clesynge,
and them inablethe° to loye evar-lastinge.
Woo, hevynes and tribulation comon are to men all and profitable.
Thowghe grevows° be manns tempta-cion,
it sleythe man not. To them that ben sufferable,
and to whom gods stroke is acceptable, purveyed loye is, for God woundyrthe tho
that he ordeyned hathe to blysse to goo.
Gold purgyd is, thou seyst, in the furnes,
for the fyner and clenner it shall be; 360
of thy disease, the weght and the peis° bere lyghtly, for God to preve the, scuryd the hathe with sharp adversitie; not gruche° and say, "Why susteyn I this?"
for yf thow do, thow the takest amis.
But thys thow shuldest thinke in thyn herre,
and say, "to the, Lord God, I have agylyte so sore: I moote for myn offensis smerte as I am worthy. O Lorde, I am split, but thow to me, thy mercy graunt wilt.
370
I am full swre," thow maist it not denye:
Lord, I me repent and I the mercy crye.' Lenger I thought red haue in this boke but so it shope that I ne myght nowght.
He that it owght agayne it to hym toke, me of his haste unware, yet have I cawght
some of the doctrine° by Reason tawght
to the man as above have I sayde.
whereof I hold me full well apayde.
For evyr synthen° set haue I the lesse by the peoples ymagination, talkynge this and that of my sycknesse, whiche came of gods visytacion.
Mght I have be found in probation, not grutchynge° but have take it in sof-frauence,
holsome and wyse had be my governaunce.
Farwell my sorow—I caste it to the cok.°
With pacience, I hens forthe thinke unpike°
of suche thoughtfull disseaunce and woo, the lok,°
and let them out that have me made to sike.
hereafter Owr Lord God may, yf hym lyke,
make all myne olde affection resorte, and in the hope of that woll I me com-forte.
Thrygwhe gods iust dome and his judgment,
and for my best, now I take and deme, gave that Good Lorde me my punishe-
ment:
in welthe I toke of Hym none hede or yeme,"° Hym for to please and Hym honoure and queme,"°
and He me gave a bone on for to knaw, me to correcte and of Hym to have awe.

He gave me wit and He toke it away when that He se that I it mys dyspent, and gave agayne when it was to His pay,
He grauntyd me my giltes to repent,
and hens forwarde to set myne entent, unto His deitie, to do plesaunce, and to amend my synfull governaunce.
Lawde and honore and thanke unto The
be,
Lord God, that salve art to all hevynes!
Thanke of my welthe and myne adver-
syte,
thanke of myne elde and of my seknese, and thanke be to Thyne infinite goodnese
for Thy gyftes and benefices all,
and unto They mercye and grace I call.
Endnotes

1 The text below is taken from The Series, ed. Frederick Furnivall, Hoccleve’s Works: The Minor Poems (Kegan Paul, Trench, Trübner, and Co., 1892). The Complaint appears in lines 1–413 of The Series. This text is in the public domain. Footnotes and endnotes have been provided by Will Rogers.