Acknowledgments

I am deeply indebted to Eileen Joy for years of interest, inspiration, generosity, and support. This project, like so many others, would have been impossible—perhaps inconceivable—without her. I am obliged to Vincent W.J. van Gerven Oei for his immensely thoughtful editorial work and beautiful cover design.

I am grateful to David Levine, Fred Alford, Christian Hite, and Eduardo Frajman for their thoughtful comments on an early version of the essay, “Is Sex Interesting?” I have sought to address each of their concerns—some of which were, frankly, quite tough—in my revisions, but have not done so in ways that would ultimately appease these generous friends and colleagues, who should not be considered to have endorsed the final product.

A portion of the essay “How to be a Victim: Camus’s Plagues and Poisons” has been modified from a portion of Ideologies of Experience: Trauma, Failure, Deprivation, and the Abandonment of the Self (Chapter 6) published by Routledge in 2016.

A version of the essay “Civilizing Ironies” was published under a different title in Clio’s Psyche 21, no. 3 (2014): 264–68.