ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

Early versions of some of the chapters gathered in this volume were presented at different conferences and seminars, among them the Graduiertenkolleg “Mediale Historiographien” of the Universität Erfurt, Germany; the University of Macau; Johns Hopkins University; Yale University; Cornell University; the University of Manitoba, Winnipeg; the Deutsche Forschungsgesellschaft Symposium on “Allegory” at the Villa Vigoni, Italy; and my own institution, the University of California, Santa Barbara. I am grateful to the colleagues and students at these institutions for the lively discussions that have helped shape the arguments of this book.

I thank Gil Anidjar, Cathy Caruth, Wolf Kittler, Christian Kläui and Bettine Menke for their critique, inspiration, and encouragement.

I thank Eileen Joy for inviting me to punctum books and Vincent W.J. van Gerven Oei for his invaluable help in the preparation of the manuscript.

I thank Julie Carlson, my friend and colleague, for our deeply inspiring exchanges and for her unwavering generosity in reading and responding to my work.

My profound gratitude goes to my American–Armenian–German–Afghan family here and abroad for countless conversations and for their love, especially to Helga Weber for teaching me so much, to David and Ruben Saatjian for moving me, and to Mark Saatjian — for everything.
