NEGATIVITY

What we predicted for the world in the 80s has become the negation of negation in the hands of a few charlatans today — what they call democracy is what for ages we have known as fascism. It is not only about emptying the content of concepts; the attack comes from deeper levels. As we were dealing à la Blanchot with double negation,¹ that is, with the rejection of a proper language which renders possible the object and the object as concept in turn, they have transformed the double negation into affirmation. This is what they beat us with, by rendering the negative invisible.
