Finale
& now the paper forest has burned, & now the final beams stand, writing in carbon cross the sky, which is unreal.

You who stood with the world before you, who stand now with the world at your back, facing the world again. As though there were a final question rather than a stand of blackened stakes lining the sky, which does not exist.

The sky, which you imagine above the absent forest. The language reels.