Brown Judaic Studies has been publishing scholarly books in all areas of Judaic studies for forty years. Our books, many of which contain groundbreaking scholarship, were typically printed in small runs and are not easily accessible outside of major research libraries. We are delighted that with the support of a grant from the National Endowment for the Humanities/Andrew W. Mellon Foundation Humanities Open Book Program, we are now able to make available, in digital, open-access, format, fifty titles from our backlist.

_The Synoptic Problem in Rabbinic Literature_, edited by Shaye J. D. Cohen (2000), contains six original essays by noted scholars that address the issue of the relationships between early rabbinic texts. They grapple most broadly with the question of whether rabbinic documents can, and should, be studied in isolation from other rabbinic documents.

This edition is identical to the original text.
