Exploring Materiality and Connectivity in Anthropology and Beyond

Schorch, Philipp, Saxer, Martin, Elders, Marlen

Published by University College London

Schorch, Philipp, et al.
Exploring Materiality and Connectivity in Anthropology and Beyond.
Project MUSE. muse.jhu.edu/book/81887.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/81887

For content related to this chapter
https://muse.jhu.edu/related_content?type=book&id=2778239
List of figures

| Figure 2.1 | Minoan conical cups from Tel Beth-Shemesh, Level 9 (Bunimovitz et al. 2013: 1. p. 56 fig. 4; 2. p. 55 fig. 3; with the kind permission of the authors). |
| Figure 3.1 | Unidentified photographer, Chief (Prince) Egbe of Warri with relatives, ca. 1895. © Unilever Collections, Unilever Art, Archives and Records Management, Port Sunlight (UAC/1/11/10/3/2/1). |
| Figure 3.2 | Jonathan A. Green, Chief Charles Horsfal’s canoe, Degema, 1902. © Unilever Collections, Unilever Art, Archives and Records Management, Port Sunlight (UAC/1/11/10/3/2/1/14). |
| Figure 4.1 | The Miraculous Medal, in a pilgrim’s guide to the Rue du Bac chapel in Paris, entitled ‘Chapelle Notre-Dame de la Médaille Miraculeuse’. Private collection of the author. |
| Figure 4.2 | The Green Scapular, on top of the accompanying information leaflet provided by the Rue du Bac chapel in Paris. Private collection of the author. |
| Figure 4.3 | Statue of Saint Mary in the Rue du Bac chapel in Paris. In a pilgrim’s information booklet, ‘Catherine Labouré: la sainte du silence’. Private collection of the author. |
| Figure 5.1 | Ochún, Orícha of sweet water, love and beauty. Installation by Natalie Göltenboth, Symposium Connecting Materialities/Material Connectivities, Munich 2017, LMU Center for Advanced Studies. Photo by Vivien Ahrens. |
Figure 5.2 Yemayá, Orícha of the Sea. Installation by Natalie Göltenboth, Symposium Connecting Materialities/Material Connectivities, Munich 2017, LMU Center for Advanced Studies. Photo by Vivien Ahrens.

Figure 5.3 Changó, Orícha of fire, virility and power. Installation by Natalie Göltenboth, Symposium Connecting Materialities/Material Connectivities, Munich 2017, LMU Center for Advanced Studies. Photo by Vivien Ahrens.

Figure 5.4 Ogún, Orícha of blacksmith and iron, cutting and separating. Installation by Natalie Göltenboth, Symposium Connecting Materialities/Material Connectivities, Munich 2017, LMU Center for Advanced Studies. Photo by Vivien Ahrens.

Figure 6.1 Map of sixteenth-century horse trade ecumene. Map by Zachary Culbreth and Srinivas Reddy, 2018.

Figure 6.2 Horses with Portuguese merchants. Panel from Vitthala Temple complex (Hampi, Karnataka, India). Photo taken by the author in 2018.

Figure 7.1 Advertisement for phones at Huyustus Fair, La Paz. Photo taken by the author in 2017.

Figure 7.2 Retail shop at Huyustus Fair, La Paz. Photo taken by the author in 2017.

Figure 8.1 Curtain of veils shielding off private space from public workshop area. Installation by Anna-Maria Walter, Symposium Connecting Materialities/Material Connectivities, Munich 2017, LMU Center for Advanced Studies. Photo by the author.

Figure 8.2 Peeking through the flexible wall of veils into a separate private sphere. Installation by Anna-Maria Walter, Symposium Connecting Materialities/Material Connectivities, Munich 2017, LMU Center for Advanced Studies. Photo by the author.

Figure 8.3 Still from a film depicting a wedding ritual in Gilgit, northern Pakistan. Installation by Anna-Maria Walter, Symposium Connecting Materialities/Material Connectivities, Figure 8.4  Chat in SMS messages by young married couple (like all quotes in this contribution, collected and translated from Urdu and Shina by Anna-Maria Walter).

Figure 9.1  Map of Ganzi Tibetan Autonomous Prefecture, Sichuan Province, China, 2006. Cartography by Chandra Jayasuriya.

Figure 10.1 Close-up of humidifier stocked with water collected from a puddle on King Street, Aberdeen, in late January 2017. Installation by Marc Higgin, Symposium Connecting Materialities/Material Connectivities, Munich 2017, LMU Center for Advanced Studies. Photo by Vivien Ahrens.

Figure 10.2  King Street, at night after the rush hour. Photo by the author.

Figure 10.3  What remains: view of installation. Installation by Marc Higgin, Symposium Connecting Materialities/Material Connectivities, Munich 2017, LMU Center for Advanced Studies. Photo by Vivien Ahrens.

Figure 10.4  Portrait of my son with line of toy cars, taken from King Street. Photo by the author.

Figure 11.1  Moly, Jennifer Clarke, 2015. Cyanotype print using plant matter (galamanthus roots) on handmade paper, 60 cm x 60 cm. Photo by the author.

Figure 11.2  Yuriage Shogakko (Yuriage Primary School), Jennifer Clarke, 2014. Photo printed on card, 15 cm x 10 cm.

Figure 11.3  Urato, Jennifer Clarke, 2017. Digital print of mixed media image, printed on washi, handmade Japanese mulberry paper, 91 cm x 185 cm.

Figure 11.4  Ikebana portraits, Jennifer Clarke, 2017. Photo of ikebana (Japanese flower arranging) installation, by the author. Installation view of ‘Palimpsests and Remnants’, an

Figure 12.1 Map of the city of Armero, displayed at the Colombian Institute of Cartography. Image retrieved from Instituto Geografico Agustin Codazzi. 2015.

Figure 12.2 Heaps of scrap in Armero. Photo taken by the author in 2015.

Figure 12.3 Inside the scrap dealer’s house. Photo taken by the author in 2015.

Figure 13.1 Mobile of dangling Yanomami items, central to the funeral feast called reahu. Installation by Gabriele Herzog-Schröder, Symposium Connecting Materialities/Material Connectivities, Munich 2017, LMU Center for Advanced Studies. Photo by Natalie Göltenboth.

Figure 13.2 On the occasion of a festive celebration, the reahu, the bones of the dead are pulverised by grinding them in a mortar. Photo taken by the author in the 1990s.

Figure 13.3 Scene from a mourning ceremony in the course of a reahu ceremony. A woman lifts the calabash containing the pulverised bones, which are called ‘ashes’. Photo taken by the author in the 1990s.

Figure 13.4 This deliberately pixelated image of a reahu ceremony points to the imperative to forget. Photo taken by the author in the 1990s.

Figure 15.1 Photographs of refugees in sinking, overloaded boats have prevailed in representations of the refugee crisis in the media, creating a sense of a state of emergency. Photo taken in 2015 off Skala Sykaminias, in the north of Lesvos, by Alison Terry-Evans.

Figure 15.2 A northern coast of Lesvos covered with discarded life jackets in the village of Sykaminia, a common destination for refugees crossing the border. Photo taken in 2016 by the Municipality of Lesvos.
Figure 15.3  Bags made from upcycled life jackets by Dirty Girls and Safe Passage. Photo taken by the author. 237

Figure 16.1  Image of the tamga tash in Djeti Ögüz region, Kyrgyzstan, as presented in an online travel blog. Photograph by Michal Choura, 2015. https://www.choura.cz/kyrgyzstan-tamga/h69591115#h60660fa4 (accessed 11 June 2019). 248

Figure 16.2  Reproduction of the tamga tash at the Center for Advanced Studies. Installation by Lisa Rail, Symposium Connecting Materialities/Material Connectivities, Munich 2017, LMU Center for Advanced Studies. Photo by Marlen Elders. 248

Figure 16.3  Image of Tamga’s main street in Djeti Ögüz region, Kyrgyzstan. Photo taken by the author in 2015. 253

Figure 16.4  Remains of the reproduction of the tamga tash in Munich, one year after its presentation at the Symposium Connecting Materialities/Material Connectivities, Munich 2017, LMU Center for Advanced Studies. Photo taken by the author in 2018. 253