Global Encyclopaedia of Informality, Volume 1
Ledeneva, Alena

Published by University College London

Ledeneva, Alena.
Global Encyclopaedia of Informality, Volume 1: Towards Understanding of Social and Cultural Complexity.
University College London, 2018.
Project MUSE. muse.jhu.edu/book/81978.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/81978
Acknowledgements

First and foremost, we wish to express our gratitude to our authors and contributors who left their established comfort zones and worked as a team in this complex project. Without them, the Global Informality Project would not have been possible. They have shared the findings of their research from 5 continents and 66 countries with enthusiasm and commitment that crossed the traditional borders of area studies and the customary disciplinary divide. This global network has exceeded all our initial expectations. We are grateful to colleagues who shared their networks with us: Harley Balzer, Abel Polese, Sven Horak, Nicolas Hayoz, Heiko Pleines, Elena Denisova-Schmidt, Lucia Michelutti, Fredrik Galtung and colleagues at the Institute of Advanced Studies, Paris. We are grateful to Colin Marx, Nikhilesh Sinha and Bartlett Doctoral Network of Informality for their input to our project. Andrew Stahl at The Slade School of Fine Arts has advised on the visualisation of our project.

We have been honoured to benefit from the conceptual contributions to this encyclopaedia: Zygmunt Bauman, Svetlana Barsukova, Vladimir Gelman, Christian Giordano, Eric Gordy, Philip Hanson, David Henig, Paul M. Heywood, David Jancsics, Jan Kubik, David Leung, Daniel McCarthy, Nicolette Makovicky, Colin Marx, Scott Newton, Sheila Puffer, Scott Radnitz, Leonie Schiffauer, Elena Semenova, Florence Weber, Colin C. Williams and Peter Zusi – all of whom provided invaluable insights and made it possible to frame the empirical data. Katharina Bluhm, Predrag Cveticanin, Simona Piattone, Bo Rothstein, Stanislav Shekshnia and Jo Wolff all helped in various ways: our discussions of informality, blue ocean strategy, enabling leadership, opposites of informality, and normative approaches have shaped and steered the project.

We also wish to acknowledge the critical importance of the anonymous reviews commissioned by UCL Press and the peer reviewers within our network of authors. At various stages of the project, whether at book proposal stage, reading and commenting on entries, conceptualisation, or at the stage of the final submission, their suggestions have guided, influenced and corrected our course of action. Earlier critique of the
Acknowledgements

Russia’s Economy of Favours by anonymous reviewers has pointed us in the direction of comparative, historical and global perspectives undertaken in this project.

At the School of Slavonic and East European Studies, we wish to thank all the colleagues who helped in various ways. Geoffrey Hosking and Sergei Bogatyrev have enhanced the volume with a fascinating historical dimension. We are grateful to Maria Widdowson, Mukesh Hindocha, Claudia Roland, Esther Williams, Roxana Bratu and Philipp Koeker for their part in administering the project.

Lesley Pitman gave guidance and helped to establish links with the UCL department of Digital Humanities. We are grateful to our Digital Humanities interns, Sharon Lin, Yang Liu, Adriana Bastarrachea Sanchez and Yuan Gao for their enthusiasm and work on the website. Max Lambertson and Denisa Benze helped to visualise informal practices on www.informality.com. Matt Kehman created its professional look. Matthew Cooper has helped with hosting. For her successful work in obtaining permissions to reproduce visual materials we are grateful to Anastasia Shekshnya, who has assembled images for these volumes, and also to Chris Holland, at the Copyright Support office at the UCL Library Services, for his advice and guidance. We are particularly grateful to the Russian Museum in St Petersburg for permission to reproduce the work of Pavel Filonov on the cover of the encyclopaedia.

We have mostly relied on researchers who volunteered entries and managed to get by with minimal funding for editing and dissemination, but without funding this project would not have been possible. In chronological order, our start-up small research grant was given by the UCL School of Slavonic and East European Studies (5K). Our cooperation with Digital Humanities was funded by the UCL Centre for Humanities Interdisciplinary Research Projects (CHIRP) in 2014–16 (5K). This book benefitted from Alena Ledeneva’s fellowship at the Paris Institute for Advanced Studies, with the financial support of the French State managed by the Agence Nationale de la Recherche, programme ‘Investissements d’avenir’ (ANR-11-LABX-0027-01 Labex RFIEA+). Our website and editorial activities were mainly supported by the dissemination funding of the European Union Seventh Framework Research Project, ‘Anti-corruption Policies Revisited: Global Trends and European Responses to the Challenge of Corruption’ (ANTICORRP, 2012–17, Grant agreement No: 290529). We have benefitted from cooperation with Dr Peter Berta, UCL Marie-Curie fellow in 2015–17 (IEF, Grant agreement No. 628331), working on politics of difference and post-socialist transformation. We are grateful to our partners in the European Union’s
Horizon 2020 project on ‘Closing the Gap Between Formal and Informal Institutions in the Balkans’ (INFORM, Grant agreement No. 693537). Ružica Šimić Banović has helped us with the first submission of the encyclopaedia in October 2016, thanks to the University of Zagreb Academic Mobility grant. The UCL European Institute has helped with publication cost and dissemination and has been a supporter of the UCL-SSEES-IAS Centre for the Study of Social and Cultural Complexity (FRINGE). We are most grateful to Tamar Garb and the Institute of Advanced Studies for hosting FRINGE events and for being so supportive of our dissemination activities and publications.

We wish to thank the FRINGE Centre and the Provost Strategic Fund, which helped fund the Global Informality Project website (www.in-formality.com). We thank Akosua Bonsu and all the Fringers for being such great help and fantastic company at the FRINGE Informality events. We are grateful to Catherine Stokes at IAS and Catherine Thomas and the UCL Festival of Culture for the display of students’ posters, and also to students of the Informal Practices in Postcommunist Societies course and Political Analysis course at SSEES. Over 15 years, graduate students of Informal Practices and postgraduate research students have produced an impressive range of research, some of which has been included in the encyclopaedia.

Our UCL Press Editor, Chris Penfold, could not have been more patient and supportive of the project, which has grown exponentially and exceeded both contractual length and printing capacity. It was a pleasure to work with the production team led by Jaimee Biggins and Sarah Rendell (Out of House Publishing), copy-editor Kelly Derrick and the design team.

Our special thanks go to our families, who have endured our obsessive efforts.

Alena Ledeneva
Anna Bailey
Sheelagh Barron
Costanza Curro
Elizabeth Teague