Ian G. Baird is an assistant professor in the Department of Geography, at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. A Canadian presently residing in Madison, he lived, worked and conducted research in Laos, Thailand and Cambodia for most of the time between 1986 and 2010. He is the author of various articles, book chapters and monographs related to upland peoples (and their relations with lowlanders) in mainland Southeast Asia.

Sina Emde holds a PhD in anthropology from the Australian National University and is currently a research fellow at the Cluster of Excellence “Languages of Emotion” and the Institute for Cultural and Social Anthropology at the Free University Berlin. Her research project focuses on emotion, memory, and violence in Cambodia.

Susan Hammond is the Founder and Executive Director of the War Legacies Project, a non-governmental organization based in Vermont that focuses on the long-term impacts of war to develop a fuller understanding of the costs of war, foster public dialogue about the impacts of war and conduct programs that help mitigate the impacts of war at home and abroad. Prior to founding the War Legacies Project, Susan worked as Deputy Director for the Fund for Reconciliation and Development for nine years where she lived and worked in Cambodia, Laos, Vietnam, and New York. She received her MA in International Education from New York University.

Vatthana Pholsena (editor) is a research fellow at the French National Center for Scientific Research (CNRS). Currently based in Singapore, she is also the representative for the Institute of Research on Contemporary Southeast Asia (IRASEC), and affiliated with the Department of Southeast Asian Studies at the National University of Singapore. She is the author of Post-War Laos: The Politics of Culture, History and Identity (ISEAS and Cornell University Press, 2006) and Laos: Un pays en mutation (Éditions Belin-La documentation Française, 2011).

Elaine Russell graduated with a BA in history from the University of California Davis and obtained an MA in economics at California State University Sacramento. She worked as an environmental and energy consultant for many years before turning to writing full-time. She is an advisor to and former board member of Legacies of War, a US-based, non-profit which advocates for greater funding to clear unexploded ordnance in Laos. With Legacies of War Executive Director, Channapha Khamvongsa, she co-authored “Legacies of War: Cluster Bombs in Laos” published in Critical Asian Studies (June 2009). She is also the author of several novels, such as Across the Mekong River, and the Martin McMillan middle-grade adventure series.

Markus Schlecker is an affiliated researcher at the Max Planck Institute for Social Anthropology, Halle, Germany. He has written on Vietnamese imaginations of the social, paranormal experience, and the role of context in the Human Sciences. He is currently completing a monograph on burial practices in contemporary Vietnam.

Christina Schwenkel is an associate professor of anthropology at the University of California, Riverside, USA. She is the author of The American War in Contemporary Vietnam: Transnational Remembrance and Representation (Indiana University Press, 2009). Her work on social suffering and the transnational politics of memory in Vietnamese museums, media, and sites of trauma tourism has appeared in Cultural Anthropology, Journal of Vietnamese Studies, and American Anthropologist. Her current research examines urban aesthetics and socialist humanitarian ideologies underlying postwar reconstruction of Vietnamese cities.

Oliver Tappe (editor) is a research fellow at the Max Planck Institute for Social Anthropology in Halle, Germany. He published his PhD thesis, “Geschichte, Nationbildung und Legitimitatspolitik in Laos” [History, Nation-Building and Politics of Legitimacy in Laos], on Lao historiography and iconography in 2008. Parts of this research have appeared in the journals Nations and Nationalism, Asian Studies Review, and Journal of Lao Studies. His current research interests include the history of the upland frontier region of Laos and Vietnam, interethnic dynamics, and (colonial) state-minorities relations.

Krisna Uk is the Director of the Center for Khmer Studies in Cambodia. She received her PhD in social anthropology at Cambridge University. Her current research interests focus on the survival strategies of post-conflict communities in anti-personnel landmine and unexploded ordnance affected regions, the material culture derived from war, the economics of bomb salvaging, and the concept of risk.
