I express my sincere gratitude to Professor Jocelyne Cesari, director of the Islam and the West Program at the Center for Middle Eastern Studies, Harvard University, USA for inviting me to conduct this research.

For the information contained in this book I am indebted to the Muslims who most generously agreed to be interviewed. I sincerely thank the students and staff of the Islamic, public and charter schools who helped me to make this study a success. The various youth centres in Massachusetts, New York, Virginia, Maryland, Florida and Michigan have also been very supportive. Thanks to the Muslim leaders who participated in this survey. I am also grateful to the members and leaders of the Council of American–Islamic Relations who participated in this study.

In the USA, I express my grateful thanks to Imam Shamsi Ali, Imam Achmat Salie, Belal Kaleem, Dawud Walid, Muhammed Malik, Harun al Rasheed, Ahmed Hamid, Nasreen Rahman, Saiful Huq, Khojesta Huq, Shagir Ahmed, Rumana Ahmed, Razia Pothiawala, Quazi S. al-Tariq MD, Zarin Huq, Khadija Enayet, Humayun Khan, Rehana Khan, Mrs Rowshan Chowdhury, Samina Hossain, Zeenat Ara, Tasmina Rahman and Roohi Rahman. Many thanks to Barbara Puleau for appreciating the merit of this research. Gina Soos always maintained that this study was important. Thanks Gina, for your kind support. I am also thankful to cartoonist Khalil Bendib for allowing me to publish his cartoons in my book.

In the UK, I express my thanks to Edinburgh University Press, Ms Nicola Ramsay and Mr Eddie Clark for assisting me in the publication process.

In Australia, I express my sincere gratitude to Dr Mary Kooymans, who dedicated many hours to editing my drafts and making constructive comments. Many thanks to Professor Lelia Green for her kind support, and to Dr John Hall for his valuable advice. I am grateful to Ms Kate Leeson of the International Centre for Muslim and non-Muslim Understanding at the Hawke Research Institute, University of South Australia for copyediting the manuscript. I extend my warm appreciation for the constant support of my family, especially my husband, Dr Mohammad Ismat Kabir, and our three sons, Sakhawat, Naoshad and Mahtab Kabir, for allowing me to stay in the United States and carry out my research project while they looked after each other in my absence. Of course, the caring nature of my husband helped me concentrate on my research work and write this book.

In Bangladesh, special thanks to my brother, Faiz Matin, for providing me with contacts in the USA.
