Conversion in American Philosophy

Roger A. Ward

Published by Fordham University Press

Ward, Roger A.
Conversion in American Philosophy: Exploring the Practice of Transformation.

For additional information about this book
https://muse.jhu.edu/book/63766

For content related to this chapter
https://muse.jhu.edu/related_content?type=book&id=2268754
ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Writing this book was a long and cooperative process. Drs. Carl Vaught and Douglas Anderson nursed my intuitions regarding the notion of transformation into a philosophical problematic. Dr. Andy Carlson read, re-read, and thrice-read the manuscript, providing both incisive criticism and encouragement—a rare combination. Charlie Perkins, my friend and bicycle companion, routinely challenged my thinking and helped me refine my ideas and arguments. I am deeply indebted to these colleagues and friends for their help in this project.

Help of a different sort came from a class of students at Georgetown College who were brave enough to take a course titled “Transformation in Philosophy.” These students encouraged me to pursue the ideas central to this text, and many of them are now pursuing their own ideas in various graduate programs and mission fields. Two other students rendered special service: Emily Brandon read and critiqued the earliest version of my chapter on William James and Whitney Purcell aided me in compiling the index and proofreading the text.

I want to thank my colleagues in the philosophy department at Georgetown College, Drs. Norman Wirzba and Bradford Hadaway, as well as Dr. Homer White, a philosophical mathematician beyond compare, for their support and encouragement. My research was also aided by the Pew Foundation in the form of a summer research grant in 1999.

My family has been a constant source of inspiration and support in the production of this book. My mother and father, Jim and Ruth Ward, have always demonstrated the kind of trust in the transformative power of the gospel of Jesus Christ that forms the background of my philosophical understanding. My daughters Rachel and Kara continue to exhibit the remarkable grace necessary for living well together that makes my life of scholarship pleasant and productive. But most of all, this book would not have been possible without my wife Elaine. Her care for me and our family, her extraordinary practical wisdom, and her beauty that shines in so many ways makes my life rich beyond counting and inspires my trust in the goodness of the world. I dedicate this book to her.